Italy waves trophy to cheering throngs

ROME (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of wildly happy soccer fans danced in the streets and plunged into fountains across Italy in an all-night celebration of Italy's third World Cup victory.

In Venice, two clowns painted a circus elephant blue and paraded it across the bridges spanning the city's canals in a bizarre tribute to Nostri Azzuri, or Our Blue, as the victorious soccer squad is called.

Police in Rome said more than 300,000 people crowded into the city's centre as the nationwide party started moments after Italy's 3-1 victory over West Germany in the Madrid final Sunday night. The legions of banner-waving fans followed the traditional route of triumph for ancient Rome's generals.

Rome's main squares were closed to traffic two hours before the world's premier soccer match began, and filled with cheering, drum-beating fans minutes after the final whistle.

More than 40 people were taken to hospital in Rome for minor injuries, officials said. Police elsewhere reported some minor injuries and vandalism.

Flag-bedecked cars and motorcycles and huge crowds flooded nearly every Italian city, paralysing traffic for hours, authorities said.

Despite the cool weather, hundreds of celebrants splashed in fountains and tossed water bombs at passersby.

"The way we celebrate in Italy is to find water fountains and throw ourselves in," said Dario Muraro, who was in Madrid for the final match in Santiago Bernabeu stadium.

The streets of the Spanish capital also were filled with Italian fans, who turned the wide, tree-lined Paseo de Castellana across from the stadium into a sea of green, red and white Italian flags.

Shouts of "Rossi, Rossi" rang out as the fans cheered Paolo Rossi, 25, who became the World Cup championship's top scorer with six goals in the month-long tourney. He scored Italy's first goal against West Germany on Sunday night and accounted for all five Italian points in the two previous games against favorite Brazil and Poland.

One fan in the northern city of Turin carried a sign reading: "On the eighth day God created Paolo Rossi."

In Rome and other cities, there seem to be no end to the Italians' inventiveness in celebrating their national team's third championship. Italy won titles in 1934 and 1938.

Other fans painted their faces in the national colors, hoisted flags atop ancient monuments and staged mock funerals for the fallen West Germans.

A fan in Rome carried a mock coffin and distributed printed obituaries of "Signora Germania," deceased after 90 agonizing minutes.

Ships in the Bay of Naples and other Italian ports blew fog horns and sirens in tribute to the sports victory.

Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini called it a "grand victory for Italy" that will "help bring Italians closer to one another."

Placards were everywhere, reading "Knockout" and "Italy You're Great."

In Verona, more than 20,000 people gathered for an open-air performance of Verdi's Othello erupted in a 10-minute round of applause when the victory was announced during an intermission.

West German soccer fans were understandably subdued, but Italians living in Bonn honked their car horns and flew the tricolor Italian flag, and West German television showed Italians climbing the statues in Munich's Marien Square.

The Hamburg tabloid Bildzeitung trumpeted in its morning edition: "Pity — but the Italians were better — Congratulations!"

About 50 Italians drove in 20 cars along main streets flanking Moscow's Red Square from 12:30 a.m. to 1:30 a.m., while onlookers cheered and waved. "We were very surprised that Soviet police didn't interfere," said one of the celebrants. "At one point, a squad car pulled alongside and the police inside waved at us."

The party also hit the streets of Johannesburg, where Italians danced, drank champagne and leaned into car windows to kiss drivers that tried to weave through the celebration. Similar outbursts of joy occurred in Cape Town, Durban and East London.

Local architects ire is raised

TERRACE—The recent announcement that the architectural contract for the new Terraceview extended care facility has gone to a Vancouver-based firm has raised the ire of local architects.

Thirty-two firms had bid on the project with three Terrace firms ending up on the short list of six companies.

Ministry of Health officials say the Vancouver firm of Davis and Yuen was awarded the contract because the three local firms had not previously worked with this type of building and because of time constraints imposed by the financing of the project.

Gregg Lutz, of Architects North, one of the local firms which bid on the project, said none of the local firms was given a chance to discuss the financial deadline issue.

Ministry of health officials say the final decision was up to the Terraceview Society, noting that no ministry officials were present for any of the bid interviews. Despite the disclaimer, Lutz has said the local firms plan to take up the issue with provincial politicians, including Premier Bill Bennett and Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy.

The province has provided $4.7 million in funding for the new 55 bed facility which will replace the aging Skeenaview home.

Approximately 3.5 acres of the 20 acre Skeenaview site will be used for the home with the remainder of the land going to the District of Terrace for use as a park.

The Terraceview Society has said it expects construction to begin next spring with an early 1984 completion date.

Meanwhile in Kitimat, the contract to build a new courthouse has been awarded to a local company.

Kadar Construction was awarded the contract to build the new courthouse in the city centre expansion area with a bid of $439,852.

Work on the facility will begin immediately with an expected completion date of January 1983.

The courthouse was designed by Stuart C. Ross, Architect, a Prince George-based firm.

Fishermen ready to strike

Herald Staff Writer

PRINCE RUPERT—Shoreworkers and fishermen on the west coast will be in a legal position to strike Monday night.

The fish industry workers voted overwhelmingly to strike in a series of strike votes carried out last week by the United Fishermen's and Allied Workers Union (UFAWU) and the Native Brotherhood of B.C.

The shoreworkers voted 85.4 percent in favor of strike action.

Although talks are continuing between the union and fish industry employers, 72 hour strike notice has been served, putting the union in a legal strike position beginning Monday night.

Union president Jack Nichol said several months of negotiation have failed to produce any kind of wage offer from the Fisheries Association of B.C.

The last contract for the provinces, 3,500 shoreworkers expired April 30.

Nichol said the 13 fish companies grouped in the fisheries association want to eliminate overtime and cut out other long standing union benefits and contract clauses.

Commenting on the strike vote Nichol said shoreworkers had "demonstrated in the strongest terms" their opposition to rolling the contract back 20 years.

The union is asking for wage increases amounting to $2.25 per hour over the current $10.46 base rate in a one-year agreement.

The salmon net fishermen of the union and the Native Brotherhood have also voted in favor of strike action over current salmon price offers.

No strike deadline has been set despite the 87.2 per cent vote in favor of strike action.

The fisheries association wants to cut salmon prices from 18.5 per cent for sockeye to over 60 per cent for chum salmon.

Close to 3,500 fishermen belong to the UFAWU with another 1,500 belonging to Native Brotherhood.

Construction strike averted?

Herald Staff Writer

VANCOUVER—Fears of a complete shutdown of B.C.'s construction industry were postponed this week with the decision to continue talks between employers and the building trades council in Vancouver.

The B.C. and Yukon Building Trades Council, representing close to 55,000 construction workers in the province, had taken a strike vote June 21 and threatened to begin strike action Monday.

Instead the 17 international unions grouped in the council and the Construction Labor Relations Association will be holding talks this week.

Council spokesman Cy Stairs said the council had decided enough progress was being made in contract talks to continue negotiations until at least the middle of the week.

Stairs said there was hope a strike could be averted.

"Nobody wants to go out on a bloody strike unless there's a need to," Stairs said.

The general provincial construction contract expired April 30.

Although the union's hope to clear up their individual demands soon, no money offers have yet been discussed.

CLRA president Chuck McVeigh said he understood the desire of the unions to reach a speedy agreement and not shut down virtually the only bright spot in the B.C. economy at the moment.

"I think they've got some problems and they'd just as soon get the best agreement possible right now, rather than taking a long shutdown which wouldn't improve their position anyway," McVeigh said.

Adjournment uncertain

OTTAWA (CP) — The

Commons turns its attention to details of the new federal budget this week as it tries feverishly to save several important pieces of legislation from at least a temporary death.

There is still no firm indication when the Commons will adjourn for the summer since the Progressive Conservatives are threatening to drag the session through the balmy weather.

But it is expected MPs will head for their constituencies by the end of the month.

Before they do, the government will try to rescue several bills destined to die if they don't get royal assent before the end of this session, which began in April, 1980, and is already the longest ever.

Legislation not approved by the Commons and Senate, by then must be reintroduced in the fall.

All debate and committee study already undertaken must be repeated unless there is unanimous consent — an extremely unlikely event given the controversial nature of most bills.

"It's that time of year again," a Liberal insider said. "Deals are being made and legislation is going down the drain."

The Commons ended its traditional six-day budget debate Thursday night and began debate Friday on a bill limiting federal public-service pay increases to six per cent next year and five per cent the year after.

The bill also takes away the public employees' right to strike on the wage limits.

The cap on civil servant pay — one of the pillars of Finance Minister Allan MacEachen's budget aiming to reduce inflation to six per cent in 1983 and five per cent in 1984 — will likely receive harsh criticism in the House.

The Tories and New Democrats both say the government is picking on the public service and worry that MacEachen's move may be the harbinger of similar controls on the private sector.

But the Liberals maintain that leadership in wrestling the current 11.8-per-cent inflation has to start somewhere — and they say they're controlling the public sector because that's the only area over which they have obvious jurisdiction.

However, other facets of the budget won't save much money. Spending programs on job creation, interest rate relief and housing measures will send the federal deficit soaring.

Seven months ago, MacEachen said the deficit would be $10.5 billion for the 1982-83 fiscal year. Now he says it'll be $19.6 billion.

Skeptics say he's erring conservatively. Only weeks ago, the federal government pushed through legislation to borrow $6.8 billion to finance the deficit. This week, they'll bring before the Commons for debate a bill to borrow about $11 billion more.

Israel claims PLO is stalling settlement

BEIRUT (AP) — A Palestinian leader, voicing defiance of Israeli guns and American mediation, vowed today: "We are not leaving Lebanon."

George Habash, speaking as a U.S.-arranged ceasefire stilled the guns around Beirut, said in an interview that the Palestinians also reject the idea of American troops participating in a peacekeeping force to supervise the disengagement of Israeli forces and Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas.

The firing between Israeli and PLO forces on Sunday was the heaviest since the siege began, setting large portions of the Lebanese capital on fire and leaving 83 people dead and 211 wounded, Lebanese police said.

Habash's comments indicated that a wide gap still exists between Israeli and PLO negotiating positions as U.S. presidential envoy Philip Habib tried to negotiate a peaceful end to the siege of Beirut.

Habash said the PLO would not discuss leaving Lebanon until Israeli troops pull back from Beirut, a demand that Israelis have rejected.

Habash, the leader of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, one of the most radical factions in the PLO, talked to Associated Press correspondent Alex Efty in a West Beirut apartment. An estimated 8,000 PLO fighters are trapped in West Beirut by the Israeli siege. So are some 500,000 Palestinian and Lebanese civilians.

"We are not leaving Lebanon and will continue fighting not only from Lebanon, but from Syria, Egypt and Jordan, not by taking permission from anyone, but by forcing our military presence in all the countries that surround Palestine," he said.

Habash said the PLO would not accept American participation in a peacekeeping force because "the United States is part of the aggression."

He said that the United Nations should be the agency to supervise a disengagement, rather than the multilateral force, including U.S. troops, which has been discussed by Habib. The use of UN forces also was a provision of an 11-point plan put forward during the weekend by PLO chairman Yasser Arafat.

Israel has thus far rejected Palestinian demands that any evacuation of Beirut be preceded by a disengagement and Israeli pullback. And the Israelis say they distrust UN peacekeeping forces, because the UN force sent to Lebanon in 1978 did not prevent the PLO from using southern Lebanon as a base for attacks on Israel.

Israeli cabinet officials, who met Sunday, complained that the negotiating process is getting nowhere and accused the PLO of stalling. Israeli radio reported. Cabinet Secretary Dan Meridor issued a warning that Israel will not give the process much more time before taking action to eliminate the PLO presence in Lebanon.

"Our demand lays down that all foreign troops leave Lebanon, down to the last man," Israeli Defence Minister Ariel Sharon said in an interview published by a West German newspaper Sunday.

Habib and other negotiators could do little Sunday because of the thunderous barrage of artillery and rockets, some of which fell close to their headquarters. The shelling ended at night, when Habib arranged the sixth ceasefire since the invasion began on June 6.

The PLO claimed 100,000 shells, the equivalent of 2,000 tonnes of explosives, were fired into West Beirut by Israeli artillery and tanks dug in on the hills surrounding the city's southern and eastern outskirts.

Gimli reunion

To the Editor,

I am writing to you on behalf of a group of my constituents who are planning a reunion of all students and teachers who were at Gimli Collegiate Institute and Gimli Composite High School between 1950 and 1970. This reunion is to be held in Gimli, Manitoba on July 22-24, 1983.

The organizers are especially interested in contacting the many students who were dependants of RCAF personnel at the former airbase.

Any of your readers who might be interested are asked to write: Reunion '83, Box 401, Gimli, Manitoba, R0C 1B0.

Yours truly,

Awareness offered

To the Editor,

We, the Terrace Access Awareness Programme would like to inform you about our activities in the community. We are a student programme sponsored by Canada Summer Employment Development Branch. During the summer we will be compiling information for a booklet, which will be a guide for the disabled to services and access in Terrace. Gathering this information will involve a survey of all Terrace public buildings to see if they're accessible to the disabled.

This project will also include initiating a custom transit service for the disabled. We will also be looking into the possibility of co-operative housing, which will provide semi-independent lifestyle for disabled people.

As part of public education we hope to be giving workshops in the elementary schools. The children will be shown a 20 minute film and demonstrations on how to use wheelchairs, white canes, hearing aids and crutches will be given.

By the end of the summer, we hope the community will be much more aware of the needs of the Handicapped in Terrace.

For more information please contact me at 638-8733.

Sincerely yours
Project Manager
Kathy McCooney

Fathers unite

To the Editor,

We, the Father's Rights Action Group are fighting to maintain our rights as fathers, and our children's rights as people.

I have spoken on behalf of our group to numerous newspapers, an hour and a half open line show on CKNW in Vancouver, open line in Regina, Sask., and community groups. The response has all been positive and overwhelming.

Our group would like to see: a full-time child advocate, police with the power to enforce access orders, and to wives using support payments as a condition of access, end to the "mother is best suited" mentality, recognition of the children's right to be heard in court, equal distribution of debts as well as assets. These are just some of the changes we would like... the list goes on.

We recognize that there are a great number of fathers, that, after the marriage fails, turn their backs on their kids. We are not interested in these men. We want fathers who love their children, are divorcing or have divorced their wives... not their children. We want fathers that want to be involved with their children's lives, fathers that refused to be cut off from their children just because the mother is living with someone else, an does not want her "new family life" disturbed. We want fathers that, in the words of Roman and Haddad, refuse to be treated as a "Disposable Parent". (Penguin Books, 1979)

I invite any father having problems with access, maintenance, the courts, lawyers, social agencies, etc. to contact me. Please enclose a stamped self addressed envelope.

We are not a "Disposable Parent", and will not be treated as such. Fathers have rights too!

Native women need counting

EDMONTON (CP) — Blanche MacDonald thinks it's time native women stood up to be counted.

Cree culture has always relied on "high-powered matriarchal women," but mostly they've been an untapped potential resource, says MacDonald, a Metis who owns one of Canada's largest modelling schools.

Born to a Cree mother and a French father in the small town of Faust on Lesser Slave Lake in northern Alberta, MacDonald said her childhood struggle gave her determination to build her Vancouver-based business.

"I think difficulties as a child can become adult strengths," she told about 50 women Friday at the founding meeting of Canada's first Native Women's Network.

"We've always been more liberated than most women, because we have always done the hardest work, on our ranches and reserves," she said. "Women have to be treated as equals."

Native women have a strong survival instinct because they are close to nature and to their roots, she said.

"Our confidence is there, it just must be demonstrated."

MacDonald said Indian women have also been maligned by movies and television which portray them as downtrodden "chattels."

MacDonald, who started her first modelling agency in Vancouver 20 years ago, raised two children while building a successful business with 45 employees and sales of more than $1 million annually.

Now active on many advisory boards, MacDonald also cited "intimidating" experiences in native organizations where she was handed a steno pad and told to take notes.

To illustrate the political power native women can yield, MacDonald related the story of Josephine Charlie, now 83. Charlie is a west coast Salish Indian who, 30 years ago, argued against her band accepting an offer of $40,000 in return for Indian land in what now is West Vancouver.

"There was a terrible fight about it, even her husband the chief said he was not responsible for her," MacDonald said. "But in the end she won the support of all the women in the band."

The women won a vote, and instead of selling the land, the Salish band leased it for what is now Park Royal development, worth about $400 million.

"We can't count on the men to take care of us anymore," MacDonald said.

"It just doesn't work that way anymore."

Prowler has a royal visit

LONDON (AP) — An early-morning prowler entered Queen Elizabeth's bedroom at Buckingham Palace after evading security on Friday, but the 56-year-old monarch reacted to the intrusion in a "calm way," Deputy Prime Minister William Whitelaw said today.

The Daily Express said that during the incident the Queen chatted with the prowler for 10 minutes to keep him calm. The newspaper said the man asked the Queen for a cigarette, giving her a chance to summon a palace footman who detained the man. It said the Queen was unharmed and "unruffled by her ordeal."

Whitelaw, who as home secretary has responsibility for British police, told the House of Commons he was "shocked and staggered" by the incident, which occurred at 3 a.m. Friday.

Confirming that the Queen was unruffled by the incident, Whitelaw told the Commons: "The House will admire the calm way in which Her Majesty responded to what occurred."

A 30-year-old vagrant named Michael Fagan — arrested inside the palace at 3 a.m. Friday, police reported, was charged Saturday with an earlier palace break-in. Scotland Yard refused to say why Fagan was not immediately charged with the Friday break-in.

"The Queen was very brave," The Express quoted an unidentified senior police detective as saying. "By being calm she did not alarm the man — or he would have panicked and it might have been a completely different story."

Whitelaw said he ordered "immediate steps" to tighten security at the palace and other royal residences. Police would investigate the palace incident "with the utmost urgency."

"It is clear on this occasion there were technical errors," said Whitelaw. "It is equally clear there were human errors, too."

Whitelaw gave no details of Friday's incident beyond confirming that a man was arrested inside the Queen's bedroom.

The news report of the bizarre encounter prompted calls from MPs for a government inquiry into security for the Royal Family. Workmen spent the weekend stringing barbed wire atop the old iron spikes on the brick wall around Buckingham Palace.

A palace spokesman said: "We cannot add anymore (because) a man has been charged." Once a person is charged with an offence under British law nothing can be reported about the suspect beyond what is said in court.

Fagan, was charged Saturday with breaking into the palace on June 7 and stealing a half-bottle of wine.

The defendant, who appeared in court Saturday, barefoot and wearing a dirty T-shirt and jeans, was ordered held without bail pending trial.

Talking Politics

This space offers your provincial and federal elected officials a place to say their piece. Columns are selected on the basis of relevance, not party preference and are the opinions of the author not the editor or this newspaper.

by DAVE BARRETT

The recession is accelerating in British Columbia faster than anywhere else in Canada now and is a direct result of Socred government decisions. These harmful Bill Bennett Socred policies are crippling the small business and home construction industries.

Both are key sectors, employing large numbers of our citizens and producing significant portions of our total provincial economic activity on which we rely when foreign markets soften for our resources. Yet both have been spared by the Socred priorities.

For the past year, in order to help raise funds for politically-inspired mega-projects, Bill Bennett has been heaping enormous taxes and other levies — from hydro fees to permit fees — onto all taxpayers. And now he's shifted much of the education costs directly onto industrial and commercial properties, also. The rate of bankruptcies and receiverships, already very much higher in B.C., will worsen. And that means more jobs lost as well as personal ruin for some.

At the same time, with house construction plummeting, the Socreds deliberately shifted more burden onto home ownership by reducing the level of revenue-sharing grants to municipalities and also refusing to proclaim the B.C. Savings and Trust Act which could lower mortgage interest rates and stimulate construction and jobs.

In fact, the Socreds have consistently refused to discuss the state of the economy in B.C. or to consider any of the 26 proposals for recovery which the NDP legislators proposed on the eve of this session. Last winter, they used closure in an all-night sitting to stop a debate by the NDP, calling for government action to help economic recovery.

A week ago, the government cut off debate on an NDP amendment aimed at discussing the economic crisis in B.C. to identify useful proposals for recovery, and putting them into action. The Socred cabinet, reeling from its own mismanagement and self-inflicted embarrassments, simply does not want to deal with the economic problems which are hurting our citizens.

For some time, two major initiatives have been proposed by the NDP which would have immediate impact. The McMath formula for school cost-sharing would reduce the burden to both homeowners and business taxpayers. The Savings and Trust Corporation would channel existing government deposits through credit unions to provide up to $1 billion in mortgage funds at about 13 per cent. Both are affordable programs which would help citizens and revive jobs for thousands.

The Socreds won't listen because they have other priorities. Easing the current economic distress is no more a Socred priority than is preventing the closure of hospital beds. We need leadership desperately to rekindle hope for British Columbians. But Bill Bennett and his Socreds have proven they are incapable of providing it.

Dollar faltering

EDMONTON (CP) — Whether it's a sudden decision to stay home or cross the border, both Canadians and Americans are being affected by the fluctuations of the faltering Canadian dollar.

While travel experts are indefinite about what the summer will bring the Indians, they predict it won't necessarily mean a bonanza for domestic travel coffers.

And because Canada's currency is still strong against its European and British counterparts, there's no sign the traditional summer horde of overseas travellers is abating.

Although many travel experts say holidays are the last thing a recession-battered consumer gives up, the general picture is not especially bright. Optimism, however, looms large about the industry's long-term health.

Depending on with whom one is speaking, the estimates range from a mini-boom to an all-out bust for tourism this year. A sampling of private industry, government and civic spokesmen, some reluctant to be quoted, reveals a consensus: industry buoyancy is suffering but if enough Americans come north and sufficient Canadians stay home, it may salvage an otherwise dismal season.

Edmonton's Visitors' Bureau reports a 30-per-cent drop in traffic in the first six months of this year and occupancy in city hotels fell 13 per cent. Some individual hotels report larger losses due to cancellations of package tours.

Dennis Pasula of the city's travel department says a cheaper dollar may not be the key selling point for luring U.S. tourists. Personal preferences, the strength of promotion and word-of-mouth play strong roles.

It's generally agreed there will be more domestic travel this year, though Wardair is enjoying the unexpected boost of Americans crossing the border for cheaper trips to Hawaii.

Dramatically increased numbers of Americans are going to Hawaii, out of Toronto and Vancouver, says Brian Walker, vice-president of Wardair sales in Toronto.

Jack Wallace of Air Canada says a soft domestic travel market has been helped by the various bargain fares, but they "are not conducive to profitability and long-term stability."

"Many people just feel their dollars go further in the United States," says Gary Elliot, vice-president of Marlin Travel, Edmonton, Canada's second-largest travel agency. It's a factor that may not curtail Canadians' plans for heading south.

And there have been reports of problems with Americans getting exchange rates. They have ranged from as low as 15 per cent to as high as 40 per cent in some Canadian centres.

Reports range from Vancouver cabbies not accepting U.S. greenbacks, to restaurants offering from 10 to 30 per cent to a Fort Erie, Ont., service station offering a 40-cent premium on the U.S. dollar for gas purchases.

So far this year, tourist numbers have fallen in the Rocky Mountain resort communities of Jasper and Banff. Last year Banff drew more than eight million tourists and Jasper more than two million. For the first five months of this year, Banff had about 470,000 fewer visitors and Jasper recorded a drop of about 42,000.

Richard Benfield, general touring manager of Travel Alberta, predicts the province's industry will be helped by more residents travelling within it. Tourism generated $1.5 billion last year for the province and is the third-largest industry.

B.C. doctors are plentiful

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia has more doctors per capita than any other province in Canada but there are still critical shortages of physicians in remote areas and more than enough doctors in metropolitan areas, B.C. Health Ministry figures show.

In 1980 B.C. had one doctor for every 510 people (including hospital interns and residents) while Saskatchewan has one for every 677 residents, the Northwest Territories had one for every 1,070 residents and Ontario, which was closest to B.C.'s ratio, had one doctor for every 515 people.

One civil servant in the Health Ministry, called B.C. the "most over-doctored place in North America."

Dr. William Jory, president of the B.C. Medical Association, agrees and says the answer is to make it more difficult for doctors to come to the province.

"The College of Physicians and Surgeons should be invited, with the encouragement of the provincial government and the medical association, to make it much more difficult for doctors to come in," said Jory in an interview. "Not to deny anybody, but to say that if they want to come that badly, because we have sufficient in most fields, it's going to be very, very difficult."

Jory is an ophthalmologist whose practice is based in Terrace, 700 kilometres northwest of Vancouver. He trained and practised in Britain before moving his practice to British Columbia and he still spends several months each year in Britain.

He is the only ophthalmologist, an eye specialist, in a huge area that covers much of northern B.C. He has more than 80,000 people in his practice area and spends much of his time travelling to remote communities in a boat equipped with a portable clinic.

He knows the problems of attracting doctors to rural and remote areas.

"You know why they don't go there; it's how you solve it that's the problem," he said. "The people up there don't want new doctors with no experience; they don't want doctors who've just come for the money; they don't want doctors who've just come for a short time, whose eyes are really on Victoria or Vancouver."

Jory suggests the way to solve the problem is by exposing medical students to remote communities towards the end of their training.

Dr. Toni Hawkes, a family practitioner who is chairman of the medical staff at the G. R. Baker Memorial Hospital in Quesnel, 400 kilometres north of Vancouver, is concerned about the imbalance between urban and rural medicine and especially about native Indian care.

"I don't think any of us are proud of the way we have looked after our native people," he said. "There are something like 350,000 native Indians in Canada. There isn't one single native Indian doctor. Not one."

Crash investigation continues

KENNER, La. (AP) — Cockpit recordings from a Pan Am jet may show whether the crew heard control tower reports of potentially dangerous wind currents before the plane took off in a thunderstorm and crashed minutes later, investigators say.

The U.S. National Transportation Safety Board said two wind-shear alerts were issued about a minute apart, 7½ minutes before Flight 759 crashed after takeoff Friday just outside New Orleans, killing all 145 people aboard and eight on the ground.

But the board refused Sunday to speculate whether wind shear — swirling, unpredictable winds that disrupt normal air currents — caused the second-worst plane crash in U.S. history.

Coroner Dr. Charles Odom said the identification of the dead should be nearly finished today, and the

The victims, laid out in refrigerator trucks in a huge Delta Air Lines hangar at Molsant Airport, were examined by a team of pathologists, medical experts and the FBI's identification unit.

"There probably will be some that will be almost impossible to identify, but once the fingerprints are in, indications are 90 per cent will be identified," Odom said.

The flight of the Boeing 727 originated in Miami and was headed for Las Vegas, Nev., and San Diego.

Board spokesman Barbara Dixon said it is possible the crew never heard the wind shear alerts. The pilot, might have switched radio frequencies from ground control, which governs taking planes, to local control, which instructs takeoffs and landings, she said.

But the presence of wind shear alone does not warrant cancellation of a flight, said board vice-chairman Patricia Goldman. "Wind shear is but one of the pieces of information" the pilot uses in deciding whether to fly, she said.

Investigators will learn more when the "black box" cockpit voice recording is processed by an FBI lab, she said.

The recorder's container was damaged by fire after the crash. The tape was not affected, but it contains background noise, such as sounds of the plane's windshield wipers, and the quality is poor, Goldman said.

Investigators plan to use sophisticated recording equipment to try to eliminate the background noise.

"It will take longer than we anticipated" to interpret information from the voice recorder and the other tape in the flight data recorder, said Carol Roberts, chief of the safety board's lab service division.

She said weather will be looked at as a potential cause of the crash, adding: "We're not ruling anything out."

The co-pilot, Donald Pierce, 32, of Miami, apparently was at the controls during takeoff, Mrs. Goldman said. He had logged more than 6,000 hours of flight time.

recruits. Beyond that, he said he was having trouble remembering what she had said just a few moments earlier because he was so overwhelmed.

The princess was to spend most of today in Saskatoon before returning to Regina tonight, bodies released to relatives.

Strike approved

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP) — The Public Service Alliance of Canada has given its executives the power to call a general strike and begin a variety of harassment tactics at 22 centres across Canada as early as this week to express disapproval over the wage limits proposed by the federal government for civil servants, a spokesman said Sunday.

Mansel Legacy, head of the branch that represents federal Customs and Excise employees — one of 40 alliance affiliates — said in a telephone interview Sunday the union's executive board agreed unanimously during a weekend meeting in Ottawa that Bill C-24 is "a punitive bill" that "freezes our benefits and working conditions, and freezes our right to collective bargaining and our right to strike for two to three years."

Consequently, workers may work to rule, file mass grievances, stage temporary work stoppages and even go on a wildcat strike with marching and fancy drill routine by the red-coated Mountie recruits.

The princess, who appeared without a hat for the first time since her visit began, was unshaded from the sun.

At several points along her walking tour, she was handed flowers by young children and she stopped often to talk with spectators.

A flustered Andy Hill of Regina said he got "the surprise of my life" when Princess Anne stopped to talk to him. Hill said she wanted to know if he was related to any of the RCMP

Britain returns prisoners of war

LONDON (AP) — Britain announced today it is satisfied Argentina considers hostilities ended in the undeclared war over the Falkland Islands and said it will return all remaining 593 Argentine prisoners.

The announcement came a month after the surrender of Argentine forces on the Falklands on June 14, a period in which fighting had stopped but Britain waited for Argentine assurances that hostilities in the South Atlantic were over.

The Foreign Office announced that following an exchange of messages and "various other indications," Britain now is satisfied that "the Argentine government accepts that active hostilities are at an end."

The prisoners, including Brig-Gen. Mario Benjamin Menendez, commander of the Argentine forces on the Falklands, will be returned "as soon as possible," the Foreign Office announcement said.

The 200-nautical-mile war zone imposed by Britain around the Falklands will remain in effect pending "further consideration," as will the 12-mile blockade along the Argentine coast and British economic sanctions against Argentina, the announcement said.

The Foreign Office referred today to 593 prisoners. Previously, Britain had said it was holding 590 Argentines. There was no explanation for the change.

Earlier, a Foreign Office spokesman said the government was studying Argentina's reply to a request for formal confirmation that the undeclared war in the South Atlantic was over.

The spokesman, who declined to be identified, said the message was received Sunday through the Swiss Embassy in Buenos Aires, which has been looking after British interests there since Argentina invaded Britain's Falklands colony on April 2.

The Argentine message, released by the Foreign Office in London, referred to "the present state of de facto cessation of hostilities" and proposed that Britain return the remaining Argentine prisoners "still held under harsh conditions."

The Foreign Office said the reference to "harsh conditions" was "offensive and unfounded." It said the prisoners have been held under conditions approved by the Red Cross.

The men have been aboard the 8,987-tonne British passenger ferry St. Edmund in Falklands waters for about a week. It will sail for the Argentine port of Puerto Madryn "as soon as detailed arrangements have been made," the Foreign Office said.

The government of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher had been demanding that Argentina formally acknowledge an end to the 74-day conflict before Britain would release the last 593 of nearly 11,800 Argentines captured before the surrender of the Argentine garrison at Stanley, capital of the islands some 350 nautical miles east of southern Argentina.

Without federal action in the U.S. to stimulate housing construction, there is no hope for a million unemployed U.S. workers before 1984, says a homebuilding industry leader.

"The fallout of the small-business people in our industry and the unemployment rate is just too much to sit back and do nothing," said Fred Napolitano, president of the National Association of Home Builders.

President Reagan vetoed one bill aimed at helping the wood products industry, but the Senate could override the veto this week, Napolitano told the Idaho State Home Builders convention Friday.

Predicting a tremendous housing shortage if nothing is done.

Friendly relations return?

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today lifted the U.S. economic sanctions imposed against Argentina after it invaded the British-governed Falkland Islands. He called on all those involved in the conflict to put the dispute behind them "and to work for friendship and co-operation."

The sanctions included withholding new Export-Import Bank credits, insurance and guarantees, and new Commodity Credit Corp. guarantees.

But military sanctions imposed during the Carter administration as a result of human rights policies in Argentina, and continued during the Falkland Islands conflict, will remain.

Britain recaptured the South Atlantic archipelago on June 14.

In a written statement, Reagan said the economic sanctions would end today. They were imposed April 30.

"I have made this decision after a thorough review of the situation in the South Atlantic following the cessation of hostilities," the president said. "It is important now for all parties involved in the recent conflict to put the past behind us, and to work for friendship and co-operation."

"The United States, for its part, will do all it can to strengthen its historic ties among nations of this hemisphere."

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan ended Falklands sanctions "in the interest of strengthening our economic ties with our allies."

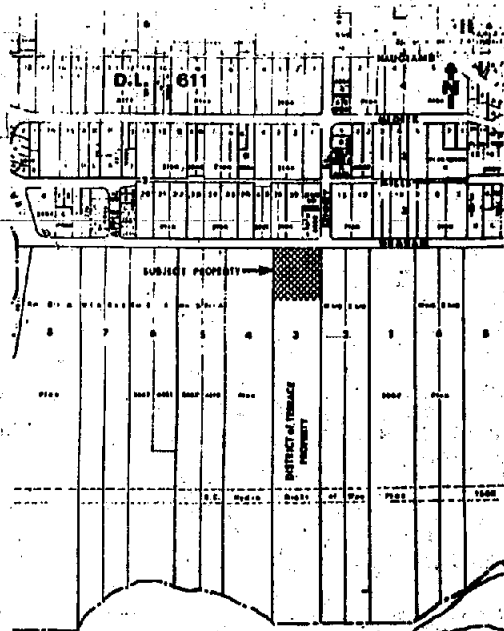

"The president took into consideration the situation in the South Atlantic and the importance we place on restoring normal and friendly relations with Argentina," Speakes said.

The British and Argentine governments had been told of the decision, Speakes told reporters.

Asked whether those governments had approved, the spokesman said: "I don't know that we asked their approval, but we have informed them." Earlier in the day, the British government announced that it was satisfied Argentina considers the hostilities ended in the undeclared war and it would return all remaining 593 Argentine prisoners.

A close tie may take out his frustrations on you. Others are easily provoked and you should not insist upon their cooperation.

Work pressures may make you want to get away from it all. A co-worker is argumentative and you'll have to count to 10 to offset an explosion.

MDs in U.S. under fire too

I am boiling mad. How much more is the average person supposed to take from the money-hungry, avaricious medical profession?

I just read that the American Medical Association changed its bylaws in December to allow physicians to "add interest or other reasonable charges to delinquent accounts." (I'm taking this right out of the newspaper.)

The doctors in this town live better than anyone else. I thought they were supposed to be humanitarians, not loan sharks. Please give my letter the space it deserves. Sign me — Ashamed Of A Once Much-Admired Profession

Many people have the notion that all physicians are rolling in money. Not true. Moreover, they are trapped by the high cost of living, just like the rest of us.

Money costs money, and the doctor must pay his rent, his nurses, buy expensive equipment and malpractice insurance — which is out of sight. Don't forget the years of training, internship and residency — would you believe 12 years for some specialties?

True, some physicians are money-hungry, but this is a human condition and no one group has a monopoly on greed. Too often the physician and the dentist are the last to be paid. I believe adding interest to delinquent bills isn't a bad idea.

Italian-Canadians hold national celebrations

Several thousand Italian-Canadians — wanting the day to last forever — continued to celebrate on Toronto streets early this morning, capping a Canada-wide party sparked by Italy's triumph in the World Cup soccer championships.

After the 3-1 win over West Germany in Madrid on Sunday, Italian-Canadians from Halifax to Vancouver poured onto city streets in jubilation, chanting "Italia, Italia, Italia."

They jumped into fountains in Hamilton, raised the Italian flag at city hall in London, Ont., and held a picnic in Halifax, but it was in Toronto that the celebration reached its highest pitch.

It was Canada Day, the Fourth of July, Christmas and New Year's all rolled into one.

Dancing, singing, crying and cheering, a crowd police estimated at 100,000 formed a constant parade along 15 blocks of one of the city's major east-west thoroughfares.

Traffic jams several blocks long formed in streets around the west-end area as carloads of Italian-Canadians from other parts of the city headed for the celebration only to find the area barred to vehicular traffic by police.

As the game ended, one man rushed into the centre of the street, placed an Italian flag on the ground, knelt down and kissed it time and again.

Television cameramen were surrounded wherever they went as people vied with each other to provide the most exuberant image. One youngster, filmed as he sold souvenirs at a sidewalk table, happily told anyone who would listen: "I'm going to be on the news tonight."

The noise was deafening as music — traditional Italian competing with modern rock — blasted forth from huge amplifiers set up at various points along the street.

Mingled with the music were drums of all kinds, horns, sirens, whistles, tambourines, firecrackers — anything that could make a noise.

The scene was repeated on a smaller scale in Toronto's east end where a four-block area of a major street was closed to allow dancing to a live band.

And always the incessant chants: "Italia, Italia, Italia," and "Rossi, Rossi, Rossi."

Paolo Rossi, superstar of the Italian team and leading scorer in World Cup series, was also a hero in Vancouver, where fans wore T-shirts saying "Rossi for Pope."

By happy coincidence, the World Cup final fell on Vancouver's annual Italian Market Day. Activities came to a standstill during the game, as organizers stayed glued to television sets in coffee bars and restaurants, but when it was over they and other soccer fans burst out onto the street and shared the news.

"It is perfect, perfect," said cafe owner Orlando Ferrato.

"It's from above — God wanted us to be really happy this day because we've been waiting so long."

Italy last won the tournament in 1938.

Then it was into cars for a true joy-ride around the city, horns blaring and streamers flying.

Similar processions were seen and heard in Toronto, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Ottawa, Hamilton, Windsor, Ont., Sault Ste. Marie, Ont. and Halifax.

In Montreal the scale of the celebrations rivalled Toronto's, as thousands of men, women, children, and senior citizens hugged and kissed each other.

Luigi Tutino, who prayed at church Sunday for Italy to win, said of the World Cup: "It means more to me than my wife."

The dominant symbol of the country-wide party was the Italian flag. In Toronto red, white and green were practically the only colors to be seen. If it could be worn, carried, pushed, pulled or driven, it was wearing the colors of Italy. Even dogs were wearing them.

The crowd wore hats, ribbons and clown suits. Faces and some cars were painted red, white and green. Some of the crowd was doused with wine from windows above.

Gella Garigliana, 15, who arrived in Toronto from Rome on Saturday to visit relations, said: "It's crazier here than in Italy."

As one father told his small son: "This is some celebration. When you grow big you'll be able to tell your sons about it."

Italians win after scandalous suspension

MADRID (AP) — From the ashes of a two-year suspension in a game-fixing scandal to the spotlight as the leading personality of the World Cup: that is the long road Italian striker Paolo Rossi has come in just 2½ months.

The 25-year-old Italian was the leading scorer in the Cup, the key to Italy's triumph, and the only pre-tournament star to fully live up to his reputation in the Cup, winning the Golden Ball award as the tournament's most valuable player.

"You can now call him Pablito again," said Giovanni Trapattoni, his coach with Juventus of Turin, referring to the nickname given him after becoming a sensation in the 1978 Cup in Argentina.

Rossi had always said it would take him a long time after his comeback to deserve that name again. But it did not. Decisive goals against Brazil, Poland and West Germany carried Italy to its third Cup victory Sunday.

Four years ago Rossi led Italy to an unexpected fourth place in Argentina.

"I've always had confidence in him, that's why I have waited for him," said Italian team manager Enzo Bearzot, who spent the two years of Rossi's suspension stating he wanted him for the Cup.

The Italian manager was criticized for his decision. Some critics argued a player out of the game for two years could not recover his form in just a few weeks. Others said a player involved in a scandal did not deserve to play for his country.

"We would have preferred a more relaxed comeback, without the pressure of the World Cup," Trapattoni said. "But we know what Rossi means for a team and I fully understand Bearzot."

Rossi returned to the Juventus lineup in April when the team was not scoring much. Rossi produced a goal and gave Juventus the decisive push in its last 'wee games toward its 20th league title.

He then joined the national team in its preparation for the trip to Spain, and most of the media called the comeback premature.

After a mediocre first round, in which he kept stressing that he was still not in a condition to do well, Rossi proved in the second round that Bearzot was not wrong.

He exploded with three goals against Cup favorite Brazil — the first time in 16 years any team, much less one player, had scored that many against the Brazilians. Then he knocked in two against Poland in the semifinals and he opened the scoring in Italy's 3-1 triumph over West Germany in the final.

Rossi was the star of the World Cup, outshining such celebrated players as Zico of Brazil, Diego Maradona of Argentina and Zbigniew Boniek of Poland.

As he returned to Italy, however, he said his main goal now is to rest and spend a few weeks with his wife, Simonetta, who is expecting their first child in three months.

Marathoners win

PRINCE RUPERT — Ron Allan of Terrace ran first in the 17 km run in the Far West Sports First Annual Islander Run during the weekend. His time was 54:48.

Other Skeena Valley Marathoners were just as great. Sue Walker of Terrace was the first of the ladies. Neil Fleischmann of Terrace was the first men's masters; Elaine Fleischmann of Terrace was the first ladies' masters; and Evelyn Kuest, despite blisters on her feet was fourth in the ladies.

Expos learn fear and loathing

San Francisco Giants don't scare you with their speed or power, but you'll never convince Montreal Expos of that.

The Giants entered the baseball game Sunday ranked fifth in the National League in homers and had only 56 stolen bases in 88 games. Yet they got five of each in edging the slumping Expos 8-7 in 10 innings.

Elsewhere, it was San Diego Padres 6 New York Mets 2, Pittsburgh Pirates 3 Atlanta Braves 1, Houston Astros 4 St. Louis Cardinals 2, Philadelphia Phillies 4 Los Angeles Dodgers 3, and Cincinnati Reds split with Chicago Cubs. The Reds won the completion of a suspended game from Saturday 6-5 in 13 innings, then the Cubs took the regularly scheduled contest 9-2.

On Saturday it was Montreal 8 San Francisco 4, Chicago 1 Cincinnati 0, Philadelphia 4 Los Angeles 2, New York 9 San Diego 7, Pittsburgh 6 Atlanta 1, and Houston 4 St. Louis 2. Giants catcher Milt May had two of the five homers to pace the San Francisco victory.

May's solo homer with one out in the 10th provided the winning margin, handing Montreal its 15th defeat in 20 games.

Reggie Smith, May and Champ Summers hit consecutive home runs in the second inning. Joe Morgan homered in the third.

But Montreal catcher Gary Carter, who was victimized on the stolen bases — by Smith, Jim Wohlford, Chili Davis and two by Johnnie LeMaster — had a solo homer, run-batted in single and a sacrifice fly to tie it in the ninth.

Then May won the last game for the teams before the all-star break.

Padres 6 Mets 2

Tim Lollar, 10-2, won his 10th game to raise his league-leading winning percentage to .833, belted his third home run of the year — second against the Mets — and singled to raise his batting average to .296. The Padres, 50-36, entered the all-star break second in the NL West, two games behind first-place Atlanta.

Pirates 3 Braves 1

Former Brave left-hander Larry McWilliams beat Atlanta for his third straight victory since joining Pittsburgh. He allowed seven hits in seven innings.

Astros 4 Cardinals 2

Bob Knepper, who had gotten no offensive support in five of his last six starts, was staked to a 4-0 lead and held off St. Louis with a five-hitter. Houston has won six of nine against St. Louis this year.

Phillies 4 Dodgers 3

Fernando Valenzuela was foiled in a bid to win his 13th game — he leads the majors with 12 victories — as the Phillies, who are 2-0 lifetime against the Dodger star, moved into first place in the East Division by .001 percentage points. In the fourth, Phillies' shortstop Ivan DeJesus walked and took second when Valenzuela tried to pick him off first and first baseman Mike Marshall threw wide to second. Bob Dernier singled home DeJesus for his third game-winning hit this season.

Reds 6-2 Cubs 5-9

The Reds won the game suspended from Saturday on Wayne Krenchicki's sacrifice fly in the 13th inning. Then the Cubs rode a homer and three runs-batted in hits by Bill Buckner and three hits apiece from Bump Wills and Ryne Sandberg to the decision in the second game.

Toronto man wins Arctic marathon

EDMONTON (CP) — Edmond Mah of Toronto has won the gruelling Midnight Sun Marathon, set in the remote hills of the most northerly part of Canada.

Rev. Laurie Dexter, the Arctic Bay resident who was on the 1961 aborted cross-country ski expedition to the North Pole, was second.

Stretching over 84 kilometres of gravel roads cutting across hilly tundra between the tiny port communities of Arctic Bay and Nanisivik on Baffin Island, last weekend's race was billed as making "the Boston Marathon look like a billiard table."

Between those villages, 720 kilometres north of the Arctic Circle, are some of the loneliest stretches; barely a soul stands on the road to cheer runners on.

Besides the enthusiastic race organizers and participants, only a few bemused Inuit watched exhausted runners cross the finish line.

"The Boston marathon has nothing on this," said race coordinator Arctic Joe Wormersley from his Toronto home. "You're so alone in this race you're pretty close to your Maker up there."

This year marked the fourth time hard-core marathon enthusiasts paid $636 to fly to the northern outpost. In return they were given food for the weekend and a T-shirt.

Sixty-one runners from Canada and the U.S. climbed aboard the chartered jet in Toronto destined for Arctic Bay; only a couple of them intending to run the grand prix of the four races of various distances run during the weekend — the 84-kilometre marathon.

Also on board were Betty and Rolly Fox, parents of the late Terry Fox, who went to see the race and the naming of a mountain pass after their son.

Once in Arctic Bay, three runners were convinced to run the ultra, bring to six the number of participants.

"We got talking it up in the bar and persuaded some runners to upgrade their race," said Wormersley, who stuck to the traditional 42-kilometre course this year. He did the killer course once but said he will never challenge it again.

"Once in a lifetime is enough," he said, explaining that while the race goes from sea level to sea level, the hills in between account for 1,000 metres of climbing.

"Plus you're completely alone for about 10 hours," Wormersley added. "The mental strain alone is tremendous."

All six ultra marathon challengers finished the race. Mah did it in eight hours, two minutes and 19 seconds.

"I felt fantastic," Dexter said at the end. "People talk about runners' high but I never felt it until the last 10 minutes of the race. The hour or two before I felt as tired as I ever had."

Many natives of the area don't know what to think about the race although there are an increasing number of Inuit entries, particularly in the shorter races.

Dexter said the older natives respect the runners, but others in the community shrug it off as non-productive.

"To run for no apparent gain seems a bit foolish to them," he said.

All Star approach was upbeat

MONTREAL (CP) — Major League baseball approached Tuesday night's 1982 all-star game in a much more upbeat frame of mind than for the contest last season.

A year ago, the sport had just come through a seven-week players' strike which deprived fans of action for most of June and July. The all-star contest was one of the games postponed by the strike — 714 others were cancelled during the 50-day walkout.

When the labor dispute ended, baseball returned with the rescheduled all-star game in Cleveland Stadium, played Aug. 9 — the latest date for this contest in baseball history.

Catcher Gary Carter of Montreal Expos drilled a pair of home runs and captured the most valuable player award as the Nationals won 5-4 for their 10th consecutive victory. That extended the NL's overall margin to 33-18 with one game ending in a tie.

Carter led all players in computerized fan balloting this year, receiving 2,785,407 votes. Joining him in the NL's starting lineup are Expo teammates Andre Dawson and Tim Lincecum in the outfield along with Dale Murphy of Atlanta Braves.

Dave Concepcion of Cincinnati Reds will be at shortstop with three Philadelphia Phillies — Pete Rose at first base, Manny Trillo at second, and Mike Schmidt at third — completing the infield.

The American League starting lineup includes three members of California Angels, second baseman Bobby Grich and outfielders Reggie Jackson and Fred Lynn. A fourth Angel, first baseman Rod Carew, was elected by the fans for the 13th consecutive year, but will not be in the game because of tendinitis in his hand. He was replaced on the AL roster Sunday by Andre Thornton of Cleveland Indians.

Robin Yount of Milwaukee Brewers will be at shortstop, George Brett of Kansas City Royals at third, Rickey Henderson of Oakland A's in the outfield and Carlton Fisk of Chicago White Sox, who led all AL players in the balloting, will be the starting catcher.

Managers Billy Martin of the AL stars and Tom Lasorda of the NL named their starting pitchers and batting orders today before the teams held a public workout at Olympic Stadium.

Martin was named to replace Bob Lemon, who was fired by New York Yankees two weeks into the season. Ordinarily, Lemon, as manager of the previous year's World Series team, would have had the all-star job as a fringe benefit. But AL President Lee MacPhail felt his early dismissal this season by the Yankees would keep him out of touch too long and named Oakland manager Martin instead.

That decision and the fan vote combined to reunite on the same team Martin and Jackson, who feuded almost constantly when both were with the Yankees.

Ironically, when Lemon was fired by the Yankees the first time, in 1979, MacPhail allowed him to manage the AL all-stars. But he had piloted the New York club until June that season.

Brewers break through division

After knocking on the door for the last month, Milwaukee Brewers have finally broken through to the top of the American League East Division.

"We not only made first place after being 8½ games out, we had to climb over five clubs to get there," said Brewers catcher Charlie Moore. "And we did it in just over a month. I think everybody has to respect us now."

While jumping into first place by percentage points with an 8-5 victory Sunday over Kansas City Royals, the Brewers did it in typical fashion with four home runs.

In other American League action Sunday, it was Chicago White Sox 16 Toronto Blue Jays 7, California Angels 2 New York Yankees 1, Baltimore Orioles 8 Oakland A's 7, Cleveland Indians 4 Seattle Mariners 3, and Detroit Tigers 3 Texas Rangers 2 as major league baseball finished up business prior to the All-Star break.

On Saturday it was Boston 5 Minnesota 4, Oakland 3 Baltimore 1, Texas 6-0 Detroit 5-6, Chicago 6 Toronto 5, Milwaukee 7 Kansas City 0, California 12 New York 6, and Cleveland 7 Seattle 1.

The Brewers' victory gave manager Harvey Kuenn's team 125 homers for the first 83 games, putting them slightly ahead of the pace of the 1961 New York Yankees, who hold the major league record for a season with 240.

Paul Molitor hit a three-run homer, Ted Simmons and Moore had two-run shots and Gorman Thomas added a solo blast as the Brewers moved into first place over Boston Red Sox, who lost to Minnesota Twins 7-3.

The Brewers hit seven homers in their three-game series sweep of the Royals and have collected 67 since Kuenn replaced Buck Rodgers as manager June 2, during which the Brewers have had a 25-11 record and a .303 team batting average.

White Sox 16 Blue Jays 7

Harold Baines homered twice, including a grand slam, and Tom Paciorek and Tony Bernazard each hit three-run shots in a 17-hit attack that powered Chicago over Toronto.

Twins 7 Red Sox 3

Gary Gaetti hit a game-tying, two-run homer in the sixth inning and Minnesota jumped on all-star reliever Mark Clear for two deciding runs in the seventh to beat Boston.

Angels 2 Yankees 1

Brian Downing's home run leading off the eighth inning, his 13th of the season, carried California over New York Orioles 8 A's 7.

Eddie Murray drove in four runs with a three-run homer and a single to help Baltimore beat Oakland. Rickey Henderson stole one base for the A's, giving him 84 in 88 games this season. Lou Brock, who holds the major league record with 118, did not steal his 84th base until his 124th game.

Indians 4 Mariners 3

Toby Harrah hit his 17th homer with two out in the ninth inning to help Len Barker post his 10th victory as Cleveland downed Seattle. Barker has five losses.

Tigers 3 Rangers 2

Larry Parrish's bases-loaded error in the eighth inning on a fly ball to right field allowed two Detroit runs to score and gave the Tigers a victory over Texas.

Eskimos appear fit

Edmonton Eskimos appeared at Ottawa's Lansdowne Park fit in body and mind Sunday to beat the Rough Riders 35-7.

A total of 147 points were scored as four more teams opened their Canadian Football League seasons during the weekend. B.C. Lions got off to their usual energized start by burying Hamilton Tiger-Cats 51-34 Saturday night in Vancouver.

The Eskimos displayed their superiority at the expense of a team that won the Eastern Division title last autumn, yet fumbled the ball seven times and had two passes intercepted as 21,435 locals shook their heads in dismay.

The Eskimos did not fumble or offer up one pass interception.

Quarterback Warren Moon passed for four touchdowns and engineered another two in a little more than three quarters and replacement Cliff Olander directed the Eskimos to another in the fourth quarter.

Edmonton got two touchdowns each from running backs Kevin Cole and Neil Lumsden and one each from rookie wide receiver Mike Levenseller, veteran wide receiver Tom Scott and defensive back Emilio Fraietta on a third-quarter interception of a pass from starting Ottawa quarterback Jordan Case.

Ottawa's lone touchdown came in the second quarter with the game already over at 29-0 when John Holland scored on a 60-yard pass play with Case.

The 25-year-old North Texas State graduate was buried six times by Edmonton's belligerent defensive line. He was not in a charitable mood afterwards.

"I don't want my job on the line because someone else is not doing his job," said Case, after he'd filled head coach George Brancato in on what he felt was a grossly inadequate offensive line.

Moon completed 16 of 23 passes for 285 yards and Olander was 3-for-6 for 43, giving Edmonton 308 of their 404 net yards through the air. Case was 5-9 for 153 yards and rookie Chris Isaac 7-15 for 82 as Ottawa gained 234 of their 307 yards via he aerial route.

Edmonton had 24 first downs to Ottawa's 16 and took only 30 yards in penalties to Ottawa's 83.

To top it all off, Tony Gabriel, who retired after 11 CFL seasons — seven of them in Ottawa — after helping the Riders get to the Grey Cup last November, had to sit in the stands on Tony Gabriel Day and watch the whole thing.

In Vancouver, backup quarterback Roy Dewalt relieved starter Joe Paopao in the second quarter and threw four touchdown passes, including three in a 23-point third quarter, as the Lions roared past Hamilton in front of a crowd of 23,389.

It was the sixth straight season the Lions have won their home opener and head coach Vic Rapp praised Dewalt for the poise and maturity he's gained in his third pro season.

The 25-year-old second-string import out of Texas-Arlington was 11-16 for 201 yards without an interception. Paopao was 6-10 for 117 yards and a touchdown and one interception before jamming his hand on a snap from centre.

Tight end Harry Holt scored on 68-and seven-yard passes and wingback Steve Kearns and rookie wide receiver Mervyn Fernandez caught 15-yard TD throws. A 20-yard Paopao pass to Al Charuk and seven-yard sprint by running back Larry Key enhanced B.C.'s total.

B.C. had a net offence of 466 yards to Hamilton's 301. Somehow, the Ticats out-first-downed the Lions 25-21. Hamilton fumbled four times and lost the ball three times. B.C. lost both of its two fumbles. B.C. took 101 minutes in penalties to Hamilton's 62.

Tennis matched

"Davis Cup matches in the fifth set is what tennis is all about," said captain Arthur Ashe of the American team. "The fifth set separates the men from the boys. Somehow, John (McEnroe) came out on top."

McEnroe outlasted Mats Wilander in a duel lasting six hours, 32 minutes and 79 games Sunday night, giving defending champion United States a 3-2 victory over Sweden in their Davis Cup quarter-final battle.

McEnroe, who lost his Wimbledon title last week to Jimmy Connors, won 9-7, 6-2, 15-17, 3-6, 8-6 in the longest match since the Davis Cup discarded the challenge round format in 1972.

"It was the longest match I've played and I can tell you that my body's not feeling very good," McEnroe said.

Wilander, 17, leader of the youthful Swedish team, also said he was tired. But the winner of the French Open wasn't satisfied with his effort. "You should always be disappointed when you lose."

In the first match Sunday, Swede Andres Jarryd upset Brian Gottfried 6-2, 6-2, 6-4, tying the best-of-five-matches at 2-2.

On Saturday, McEnroe teamed with Peter Fleming to defeat Jarryd and Hans Simonsson 6-4, 6-3, 6-0 in a doubles match.

By winning, the Americans advanced to the semifinals against Australia in October.

Australia advanced by eliminating Chile 4-1, clinching the semifinal spot when Peter McNamara and Paul McNamee beat Hans Gildemeister and Bels Prajoux 6-6, 2-6, 6-4, 6-2 in the doubles match Saturday for a 3-0 lead.

Also advancing to the semifinals were New Zealand and France, who will meet Oct. 1-3 in Paris.

New Zealand defeated Italy 3-2 Sunday when Chris Lewis beat Adriano Panatta 6-4, 6-3, 6-2 in the first of the reverse singles matches. Corrado Barazzutti beat Bruce Derlin 6-2, 6-3 in a meaningless second match.

France upset Czechoslovakia 3-2 when Yannick Noah rallied from a 2-1 set deficit to defeat Ivan Lendl 6-2, 3-6, 7-9, 6-3, 6-4 in a match lasting almost four hours. The French then forfeited the last match when Thierry Tulasn, playing Thomas Smid, withdrew after falling ill because of the heat.

Thorpe has physique

FORT ERIE, Ont. (CP) — Jim Thorpe can fix you with the steely glare of a football linebacker and has the physique to back it up.

But the 33-year-old native of Roxboro, N.C., showed the deft hands of a surgeon Sunday when he landed a soft seven-iron shot from the 17th fairway within 15 centimetres of the cup to win a three-hole, sudden-death playoff with Dave Barr of Kelowna, B.C., in the $100,000 Labatt's International golf tournament.

The two regulars on the Professional Golfers' Association tour were tied after 72 holes at 283 — one stroke under par on the 6,738-yard Cherry Hill Club that played as tough as any the pros will play on the tour because of gusting winds and lightning-fast greens.

Thorpe said the lengthy delay awaiting a ruling by officials before he took his second shot on the third playoff hole allowed him to make the proper club selection.

"It was 148 yards (to the pin) and I used a seven iron," he said when asked about the drop he got when his tee shot came to rest in a new drainage area. "But then the officials had to rule on which side of the drain to drop the ball."

"It was a good thing they (the officials) did come out because that allowed me to slow down and take some time to think about the shot."

It was perhaps a home-town crowd following the new Canadian PGA champion since he now makes his home across the Niagara River in Buffalo, N.Y.

"I sure had a lot of friends out there today," Thorpe said. "I golf with a lot of those guys."

Despite its closeness to his home, however, Thorpe said he had played Cherry Hill only six times before the tournament.

Thorpe started the day three strokes behind Barr, who led a group of four players by one stroke and led by as much as two before faltering on the back nine to finish with a 72. Thorpe had a 69 which, along with Paul Kennedy of Huntsville, Ont., was the best round of the day and won $30,000.

Barr, 39, picked up $11,500 for finishing second plus another $2,000 as a low Canadian. Earlier in the week he won the CPGA putting title, worth another $1,000.

His finish Sunday was the closest a Canadian has come to winning the CPGA championship since the present format adopted in 1978 allowed a select group of U.S. PGA tour players and national champions to compete against Canadian club pros for the title.

The top six players in the tournament are regulars on the U.S. PGA tour.

Dan Halldorson of Shilo, Man., and Ben Crenshaw of Austin, Tex., tied for third with 285 — one over par — while New Zealand Bob Charles and defending champion Ray Floyd of Miami were another three strokes back at 288.

Halldorson had a 73, Crenshaw a 73, Charles a 72 and Floyd a 70.

Spaniard Antonio Garrido, who shot 74 Sunday, was alone in seventh place at 289, five over par, while Jerry Anderson of Toronto, who played in Australia and on the Far East and European tours, was another stroke back with Welsh champion Craig DeFoy. Anderson had a 71 and DeFoy a 73.

Norm Jarvis of Delta, B.C., who led the first two days with successive rounds of 68, developed a painful blister on his right foot Saturday and his game deteriorated noticeably the last two days.

He finished with a 79 and was at 291 with Jim Nelford of Burnaby, B.C., who had 73. Danny Talbot of Beloeil, Que., runner-up to Floyd last year, finished with a 73 for 292.
